Deaf Power and Control Wheel

Domestic violence manifests itself differently in each culture based on the language and values of their people. The Deaf community is unique because it has language and cultural norms without geographic borders. Domestic violence in the Deaf community is often overlooked by hearing professionals (DV advocates, law enforcement, medical professionals, etc.) DeafHope advocates have compiled information and interviews gathered over the past 5 years from Deaf survivors of domestic violence into the Deaf Power and Control Wheel. Thanks to the Domestic Violence Intervention Project of Duluth, Minnesota for their pioneering work on the Power and Control wheel.

DeafHope's Deaf Power and Control Wheel

Intimidation

- Using ASL to make you afraid with gestures, facial expressions, or exaggerated signs, then denying it by saying that is Deaf culture to justify the behavior (example: saying you are so fat in ASL with deep or strong facial expressions and claiming that is ok in Deaf culture)
- Overuse of floor stomping and pounding on the table or door
- Signing very close to your face when angry
- Using intimidation with body language in ASL
- Getting angry because you look away while he is talking

Using Emotional Abuse

- Putting down your speech or English skills
- If partner is Deaf putting her down by calling her "hearing" because you are not fluent enough in ASL or doesn't identify with the Deaf community
- Making fun of your ASL style
- Taking advantage of the Deaf hierarchy, saying Deaf families are better
- Telling you that you have problems while he has no problems interacting in the Deaf community, by comparison
- Telling you that you are too sensitive or "hearing" like

Using Isolation

- Taking your SSI check
- Checking your pager, instant messenger, or e-mail
- Checking your TTY, VRS, and Video Phone conversations
- Controls which Deaf friends you talk to
- Moving away from the Deaf community to isolate you
- Demanding that you discuss issues with him first before discussing with others in the Deaf community
- Telling you that no one will believe you and that he was too well liked or respected in the Deaf community
- Telling you that a shelter will not accept you because you are deaf
- Taking advantage of the lack of accessible services for Deaf survivors

Minimizing, Denying & Blaming:

- Denying abuse by saying it is ok in Deaf culture
- Throwing objects as an acceptable way to get attention
- Telling private things to a Deaf crowd in front of you (example: "My wife is lousy in bed.") justifying it by saying that is part of Deaf Culture to share everything with others

Using Children:

- If you have a hearing partner, he doesn't allow the children to use ASL to communicate with you
- He doesn't allow the children to be proud of Deaf culture, he puts down you as a Deaf mother and your friends
- He tells you and the children that you cannot go to a shelter because everyone is hearing so you are better off with him where you can communicate

Using Hearing Privilege:

- Not informing you when hearing people try to call you
- Excluding you from important phone calls (example: making financial decisions without you knowing)
- Leaving you out in social situations with hearing people
- Not allowing you to have access to Deaf culture or putting down the Deaf community
- Taking advantage of the system which is not fully accessible to Deaf people.(i.e. the restraining case in the court gets postponed because of no interpreters)
- Putting you down by saying you are not good enough because you are Deaf
- If you call the police, he will try to interpret and take control of the situation to his benefit

Economic Abuse:

- Taking away your SSI checks or making you lose it by reporting additional income
- Ruining your chances for a job by spreading rumors about you in the small Deaf community

Using Coercion and Threats:

- Threatening to report you to SSI
- Destroying your reputation by spreading false rumors
- Using his power in the Deaf community to pressure you to stay with him
- Using the Deaf school as the reason why you have to stay together to support your Deaf children
- Using his prestige as a leader or position of power in the Deaf community to discredit your story about the violence
